For the New-York Tribune. Flowers in a Sick Room.

BY MES. E. J. SAMES. Yz are welcome to my darkened room O meek and lonely wildwood flowers! Ye are welcome, as light amid the gloom That haves upon my weary hours. Here, by my lowly couch of languishment and sorrow Your station take, that I may from your presence borrow Lessons of Hope, and lowly Trust, That He whose touch revived your bloom Hath the same power o'er this poor dust, To raise it from the shadowy tomb! Thanks for your presence, for ye bring Back to this aching heart and eye Bright visions of the festal Spring. Its blossoms, birds, and azure sky.

Glows the same love for you, fair flowers, As when my unchained footstep trod Lightly amid your forest bowers, And plucked ye from the dewy sod! And Thou, who gav's: these grateful flowers, I bless thee for thy thought of me! And that through long and prinful hours, A little while, companion dear, And e'en thy watchful care shall cease; O grieve not when that hour draws near,

Fading and faint, I lie; yet in my heart unchanged

But thank Heaven that it bringeth peace Lames' Place, April, 1612. THE ENGLISH.

FROM CARLYLE'S NEW WORK, "PAST AND PRESENT." And yet, with thy theoretic platitudes, what a depth of practical sense in thec, great England ! A depth of sense, of justice and courage; in which, under all emergencies and world-bewilderments, and under this most complex of emergencies we now live in, there is still hope, there is still assurance!

The English are a dumb people. They can do great acts, but not describe them. Like the old Romans, and some few others, their Epic Poem is written on the Earth's surface: England her Mark! It is complained that they have no artists: one Shakspeare, indeed; but for Raphael only a Reynolds; for Mozart nothing but a Mr. Bishop: not a picture, not a song. And yet they did produce one Shakspeare : consider how the element of Shakspearean melody does lie imprisoned in their nature; reduced to unfold itself in mere Cotton-mills, Constitutional Governments, and such like ;-all the more interesting when it does become visible, as even in such unexpected shapes it succeeds in doing! Goethe spoke of the Horse, how impressive, almost affecting it was that an animal of such qualities should stand obstructed so; its speech nothing but an inarticulate the generous, noble quadruped; those prancings, curvings of the neck clothed with thunder.

FISK'S SUMMER COOK STOVE.-In again Calling the notice of the public to this invaluable invention for economy and utility in the culinary department, the Proprietors need only refer to the hundreds among all classes of housekeepers having them in use, to convince any, who are not already made acquainted with their ments, of their superiority over anything heretofore in use for summer cooking. As three steves are already so well known, it is only necessary to say that with an economy which will fully repay the price of the stove in one season, they will do all the cooking for a family of from three to twenty-five persons.—
The oven, which is double the capacity of that of the ordinary cooking stove bakes perfectly, and is ever ready for use while their is fire in the stove. They are warranted in all cases to fully answer the recommendation, or they may be returned and the money will be refunded. Certificates from distinguished persons who have fully tested their superiority may be seen at the store 200 Water st. They are used with anthracite cook, will do more cooking with one-fourth the expense of wood in an open fire-place, and may be used with wood with similar economy.
